ing, as is all her
ilo M. Potter's lun-
was an especially
pretty affair. The table was spread in the small banquet-room on the second floor, extending nearly the length of the room. The ceiling was partly hidden by a network of asparagus plumosus, and at each end of the long apartment was a forest of palms and ferns that reached nearly to the ceiling. Down the center of the table, nearly from end to end, curved a low, narrow ledge of moss, thick set with pipsy lilies, maidenhair fern and crimson sweet peas, that in the center of the table rose to high banks that encircled a miniature pond. Branching silver candelabra were set in each curve of the flower piece, topped with crimson shades. The place cards were ornamented with up-to-date sketches of women's heads done in water colors.

Mrs. Potter's guests were Mrs. Marshall Hinman, Mrs. Arthur Solano, Mrs. G. W. Stamm, Mrs. William May Garland, Mrs. Arthur Brown of San Francisco, Mrs. Searl, Mrs. Olin Wellborn, Mrs. Frank Kelsey, Mrs. Margaret Hobbs, Mrs. I. N. Van Nuys, Mrs. S. S. Salisbury, Mrs. Hugh K.
