Q And we assume that some of them at least did brake repair?

A That's right.

Q But we don't know for any particular individual whether they did or did not?

A That's right.

Q And again we don't anything, like with the Spirtas study, we don't know anything about the work practices that were used?

A I think in all these all you would know is they were involved in either garage or brake work.

Q Okay.

A And how much grinding they did or how much sanding they did or beveling they did, would you have to infer that based on the time when they were exposed.

Q And even if we were to look at say the 1950s it's my understanding from having read your 2003 paper that in the 1950s not everybody ground?

A That's right.

Q And not everybody ground all the time of those who did grind?

A Well, sure. Of course. If it already fits you don't need to grind it.

Q And the same for beveling, not everybody did any beveling?
