A So give me the question again.

Q Did the FMSI, through its Asbestos Study Committee or any other committee while you were executive director, make any effort to study or identify the incidence of cancer from asbestos exposure in people repairing brakes on motor vehicles?

MR. FRIESTEDT: Objection.

A No.

Q Okay. My next question was why.

A Because we, the FMSI was a three-people office, they didn't do that. Some of the members may have done this and I think you will probably find your answer in a subsequent correspondence and I -- I --

Q What would be more important to the FMSI Asbestos Study Committee than the incidence of cancer deaths associated by working with asbestos released from the use of asbestos-containing friction products?

MR. FRIESTEDT: Objection.

MR. MENDRZYCKI: Objection.

MR. FRIESTEDT: Can we go off the video record?

MS. WHELAN: Objection.

MR. LELIEVRE: 11:52 a.m., we are now going off
