but it was not anything that was kept from the people.

It was made available to those who obviously were doing it, which would have been at the Ford dealerships and service centers and those who were buying the repair materials and then to anybody who wanted to make inquiry into it.

Q Was there, have you ever seen any documents from Ford relating to -- well, have you ever seen any documents from Ford indicating that, say, somebody comes into the Ford dealership to buy replacement asbestos-containing brake parts for their car. Is there, was there any directive from Ford that the dealerships should provide information to those people regarding potential hazards associated with asbestos?

A Ultimately, there was labeling put on the brake materials.

Q When was that done?

A I believe that was in the middle '80s.

Q Okay. Did Ford ever design any kind of package insert or anything to go inside the
