barred them from the Balkans, preferring to handle the touchy political situation there through official channels.

But last Fall Associated Press Correspondent Daniel De Luce slipped in—he knew a guy who knew a guy, too—and did a series of eyewitness stories on the Partisans that won him the Pulitzer Prize. De Luce's venture started everyone shouting for admission tickets, but then the authorities really jammed the lid on, and some famous writers even were given the brush-off, including one armed with a personal recommendation from a cigar-smoking party well known in the Downing Street precincts.

They relented enough at last to choose two correspondents in Cairo by lottery. They began training for their escorted jaunt.

Meanwhile Bernstein got permission from his Yank Magazine bosses to vacation in Yugoslavia.

DODGED GERMAN ARMY

How he got in is something the Germans would like to know. But

"Get him out," came back the answer.

So they took Waller over to Italy. He was whisked from one headquarters to another, from Bari to Naples, to Algiers, to Naples. He was puzzled and questioned repeatedly, but finally it was concluded that there wasn't a single technicality they could trap him on.

Poll Favors Germans Help Rebuild Europe At Close of War

DENVER, May 20.—(AP)—German workers should be required to help rebuild the devastated countries of Europe after the war, 51 per cent of 2536 persons interviewed by the national opinion research center believe.

Forty-one per cent of those asked their opinions on the question replied "no." Eight per cent were undecided.
