RECD - [illegible] 1966

Prior to your memo of December 7th concerning the above matter, I had informed Turnright Controls of the measures necessary to prevent any occurrence of skin irritation on the two women concerned. The only safe way is to vent the Aroclor vapours to atmosphere. However, Turnright Controls spent £10,000 installing an air conditioning system which unfortunately did not take into account that Aroclor vapour was being evolved. They found my suggestions financially unacceptable and wished to have modifications made to the air conditioning system to keep the concentration of Aroclor vapour below our maximum recommended figure. The Aroclor being handled is not hot enough to cause a large concentration of vapour in the workroom and that is why the women have only suffered at times when very little fresh air has been blown into the air conditioning system but at the time of my discussion with Turnright Controls and Fuel Efficiency Company Limited who design the equipment, it appeared that the level of Aroclor might be kept to a very low figure by operating the cooler all the time. However, in order to determine the affects of these modifications it will be necessary to measure the concentration of the Aroclor vapour. Our assistance was requested in this matter. Turnright Controls are quite willing to pay for us to do this work and also to pay for any equipment necessary.

I fully appreciate that if Newport T.S.D. had been represented at the meeting held in Monsanto House on the 26th November, this problem could well have been solved by now. However, I do not think it is too late to resolve the matter in terms of engineering services and therefore suggest that a meeting be arranged at Turnright Controls where Newport T.S.D. and the writer would be present.

By copy of this memo I asked Mr. Regan to contact me with regard to a date for this meeting. I enclose a copy of my Call Report to Turnright Controls dated the 26th November to ensure that all people are aware of the present situation.
