road you get off and get on a new road."

Nixon told the governors at their black tie conference ball there are "hard budget and tax decisions ahead."

"Dreams of unlimited billions of dollars being released once the war in Vietnam ends are just that — dreams," he said. "True there will be additional money—but the claims on it already are enormous.

No Illusion

"There should be no illusion that what some call the peace and growth dividend will automatically solve our national problems or release us from the need to establish priorities.

"In order to find the money for new programs," said Nixon, "we will have to trim it out of old ones."

One of Nixon's chief advisers, Arthur Burns, counselor to the President, said Monday "of course there will" be more money available after the war. Burns said if the conflict ended immediately it would free $8 billion in federal funds during the next 10 months. But he did not say whether prior claims already had committed such funds.

To Help States

While Nixon rejected the notion of a peace bonus, he did tell the governors:

"I can assure you of this: We are not simply going to tell you the states have a job to do; we are going to help you find the funds and resources to do that job with."

Vice President Spiro T. Agnew may be pressed for more specifics on that point at a closed door session of the conference later today.

The enemy command launched its fall campaign Aug. 12 with attacks on 150 allied bases and South Vietnamese towns, most of them in an arc 55 miles northwest to 80 miles northeast of Saigon. But enemy attacks dropped off sharply within a week.

U.S. officers say they believe the enemy is trying to reposition its troops for another series of attacks.

Joint Board

In addition to the U.S. Navy investigation, a joint U.S.-Australian board investigated the collision. It reported that although some responsibility for the collision lay with the Melbourne, the primary responsibility was with the Evans.

McLemore told the joint board he had no indication when he went to sleep that night that his ship might be required to change station. But he said there was a standing order that he was to be called if a change of station was ordered.

Ramsey at first refused to testify before the joint board but later submitted statements in which he said he misunderstood a message from the Melbourne giving her course. He also said he didn't wake McLemore because at first he thought it wasn't necessary and then he got too busy.
