released from the use of brakes and those types of materials in the 1940s and '50s and '60s, sir?

A No, but I can tell you this much, if you look at an epidemiologic study -- I think right now you are focusing on exposure, and it is true that most of the fiber measurement studies were done in the 1980s. But if you look at the epidemiologic study, we have garage mechanics who worked in the 1920s, 1930s included in this study, especially in the German study. They had to spell out the date of exposure.

So to a large extent, the issue of historical exposure would not apply.

Q But the answer to my question, sir, is that you don't know what the exposures were from the materials that were actually in use in the 1940s and '50s and '60s, do you?

A I don't need to know. My opinion is based on those four studies, and as I said, those four studies would include garage mechanics who worked in the 1920s, 1930s and so on.

Q I understand you don't need to know that,
