REPORTER LINDA SCOTT: "Well, ever since finding pcb contamination at sites in Lafayette and Boulder, the Environmental Protection Agency has widened its search for other possible problem areas. They're focusing their attention now on scrap yards. Pcb contamination was found at the Barger Company in Denver today where they used to incinerate transformers that contained pcbs.

"A Barger official said today that soil on top of the concrete incinerator pad would be removed as soon as they could get information from the EPA on where to ship the contaminated soil in Idaho. They added they haven't burned transformers containing pcb soil for two years now."
