Atomic Bomb Pile Set at 100 to 200

WASHINGTON, April 14.—(AP)—A college faculty member estimates that the United States stock of atomic bombs is from 100 to 200. He is J. R. Campbell of the chemistry department of Oberlin College, Ohio. In an article written for the current "Armed Forces Chemical Journal," Campbell wrote that "estimates based on many sources all lead to the conclusion that the rate (of production) is about one a week on a conservative basis."

In 1945, Dr. R. J. Oppenheimer, director of the Los Alamos atomic project, testified that in peacetime, 200 bombs could be completed in "maybe a little over a year." By intensive effort, the United States could accumulate 1,000 bombs in about two years, he said.
