Mary Anne: Hudson Pollution Known 5 Years Ago

MARY ANNE KRUPSAK
... vows fight

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. (AP) — The General Electric Co.'s neglect of the Hudson River could have been stopped five years ago, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Mary Anne Krupsak said.

"I don't know if it's criminal negligence, but [illegible] Democratic Chairman Patrick Cotter [illegible] and nothing was done," she charged.

[illegible] was supposed to be a watchdog of these things, but it had [illegible] and that the department had known people in the Hudson River valley [illegible] crazy and [illegible] was going on for years [illegible] and did nothing about it," she charged.

Mrs. Krupsak, who was campaigning [illegible] Democratic primary [illegible] Sept. 23, [illegible] other Democrats [illegible] Hudson River [illegible] Mrs. Krupsak said [illegible] during the [illegible] her town [illegible] to swim [illegible] to [illegible] but [illegible]

A spokesman for the governor said that while state [illegible] PCBs in fish [illegible] Cotter [illegible] the [illegible] Hudson [illegible] "I don't think it's significant [illegible] of the possible hazard of PCB was widely understood."

He said he had no knowledge that the department had ever released a complaint to the attorney general about PCB discharges.

The state's PCB law, which went into effect last year, requires government agencies to list the kinds of information they have available. Krupsak, in the law does not require the firm to publicly disseminate [illegible] prior to the law's enactment.

Mike Cropsey, [illegible] spokesman in Albany, called the law "a bad bureaucratic gimmick that places the burden to find something out on the private citizen rather than on the government agency."
