U.S. Drive on Bread Returns Nets Two

A determined drive to prevent the return of stale bread to baking concerns—now against wartime regulations—was opened in San Francisco yesterday, when Federal Judge A. F. St. Sure found Alex Toso, driver for a San Mateo bakery, guilty of accepting six loaves of stale bread from Salvatore de Natoli, Menlo Park retailer. Di Natoli was found guilty of returning the bread.

Judge St. Sure, questioning George Hippell, special assistant to the United States Attorney General, asked: "Why are you not going after the big fellows?"

Hippell answered: "We are. We are conducting a far-reaching investigation and expect to bring them into court shortly."

Returning stale bread is a violation of wartime regulations, aimed at the prevention of food waste, which was caused by habitual overstocking of bread by retailers in the past. A spokesman for the War Food Administration said yesterday that the halt in overstocking and consequent return of stale bread saves about 720,000,0000 pounds of bread yearly.
