Place kicking is poor this season in PCC

Stanford failed to convert in three attempts against Oregon last weekend and nearly cost the Indians the Pacific Coast Conference opener.

But the Stanfords aren't the only conference team having trouble getting that extra point. Of the six PCC teams who got into he scoring Saurday only 38 per cent of the point after touchdown attempts were good.

UCLA made good only two out of five placements, California three out of seven, while Oregon, Oregon State and Washington State each made good one of two tries for a grand total of eight out of 21.

Failure to get the point after touchdown also caused two major upsets. Penn State knocked off Illinois, Stanford's next opponent, 14-12 and Florida edged Georgia Tech, rated fifth in the nation, by a slim 13-12 margin
