liquid and emitted an offensive odor were found lining the shelves of the establishment. Many of these, it is said, were contained in large tin cans which were badly rusted and eaten by the acids used in the preservative process, while the delicacies contained in glass bottles were in many cases badly discolored by acids and age.

No prosecutions will follow, it is said as the proprietors have promised to destroy the offensive viands, and there is nothing there to indicate that manufacturing is carried on at the place at pesent. Retail deales cannot be prosecuted under the pure food law pior to the first of the year.

No blame, however, is said to attach to J. W. Lamont, the proprietor, who purchased it for $7,500 from the Harold H Stevens company about a week ago, and evidently did not fully realize the condition of the goods acquired.

Among the articles taken from the establishment by Detective Oakley was a bottle containing a fluid thought to be analyne dye, but there was no evidence that it had been used recently.

Cases, however, have been found where this mixture had been used for giving apple sauce the color of strawberries. A whiff of strawberry flavoring added to this, with a handful of clover seed tossed in, is said to have been a simple and popular recipe for manufacturing "strawberry jam" prior to the activities of Mr. McCartney and his men.—Express.
