The parties and the Court apologize to you for the inconvenience, but sometimes these things occur during the course of a long trial.

Additionally, tomorrow morning when you return, Owens-Illinois will no longer be a party in this case, so Ms. Tostanoski will no longer be present, so -- you are not to attempt to construe why they are not here or the answer to that under any circumstances. That has no relevance to anything that is before you.

Tomorrow morning, get paid. I know you know how to do that. I am reasonably assured that if you don't use my name, you will get paid, if you do, you might get paid only half.

I will let you to your own devices for the balance of the day, and we will see you bright and early tomorrow morning.

A JUROR: Same time?

THE COURT: Same time. And this day does count against the defense, by the way.

(Whereupon, jury excused -- 10:15 a.m.)
