Francisco, vice president of Joint Council 7.

Henning, executive officer of the California AFL-CIO who heads the pro-Unruh labor leaders, said more than 450 California union leaders had joined the committee and more were signing up daily.

warehouses and stockrooms.

—Installation of an inventory control system using high-speed data processing and statewide standard commodity identification.

—And installation of a quality control program.

The commission said the department subsequently conducted an in-depth study.

"When this commission began its review of progress in implementing the governor's task force recommendations on warehousing and distribution, it was not informed of the depth of the work that had been done by the General Services study team," the commission said.

A result of a malfunctioning system, the commission said, is "inefficient or multiple handling" of material and an "overstocking" of warehouses.

tricts to divert part of their state school money to community groups setting up innovative programs, but it provides no extra money.

"This is a dangerous concept," said Assemblyman Henry Waxman, D-Los Angeles. "This kind of bill may lead to real divisions in our society . . . and give legal recognition to de facto segregation."

A legal vehicle for innovation is needed, said Assemblyman William Campbell, R-Hacienda Heights, because traditional methods of education are not doing the job."
