I'm trying to ask you, I guess, is, do you know the process that was gone through to come up with the four boxes of documents?

A The process of gathering the asbestos information was one of my understanding when I worked for Ford was ongoing at that time before I left, and the process was that if you have any information related to asbestos, let the office of general counsel know, and they'll make copies or collect it or however that was put together. But that was, it was a general records retention activity.

Q So just to make sure I understand, then, was it a policy prior to your retirement at Ford that if you had any documents that pertained to asbestos you were supposed to ship them to the office of general counsel for copy?

A You had to let the office of general counsel know that you had them.

Q Okay.

A And then they would take care of it from there.

Q When did that policy go into effect?

A My estimation, it was probably the early '90s, maybe the middle '90s.
