A He did not. Dr. Aisner said in his note that he would be happy to consider Mr. Grewe for that surgery, but if you read in between the lines of Dr. Aisner's note, I think he realized Mr. Grewe would not be a surgical candidate.

The reason for that -- the only people they operate on are people who have stage one mesotheliomas where the tumor is totally confined to the pleura with no extension into the chest wall and no involvement of any of the lymph nodes in this area right here.

I think Dr. Aisner, knowing Mr. Grewe had the chest pain thought, like I thought, that the tumor had probably grown into the chest wall.

Q Now, from your -- again, from your review of the records, what was done for Mr. Grewe once he elected not to have the surgery done?

A Well, initially they were going to treat him with two chemotherapeutic agents, I think Cisplatin and Adriamycin, but then he went on a protocol at the University of Maryland and they treated him with a drug, Methotrexate or a variant.
