Gentlemen:

The Williams-Steiger Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 requires that all chemicals and materials be labeled to indicate the precautions and safety equipment required, together with symptons of possible illness. In addition, the Act states that employees must be told what materials they are working with, which means that the composition must be shown on the bag or drum.

The above Act carries a 90-day grace period which expires on August 27, 1971. After that date, the labelling of materials in conformity with the above Act becomes mandatory.

The Williams-Steiger Act is a Federal law with which we presume you are familiar. Will you please confirm that the material(s) we purchase from you will, by August 27, 1971, be labeled so as to conform with this Act.

Very truly yours,

FOSECO, INC.
