Q. — I have heard that there are machines that take care of the furnace. Can you tell me something about them?

A. — There are several types of automatic stokers that carry the coal slowly into the furnace and some even bring out the ashes and place them in the can. The only manual labor needed is filling the hopper, or coal pocket, of the stoker and carrying out the ashes. There are furnaces that have such hoppers built in, the coal being fed to the fire by gravity. A blower is usually used to provide a draft, as they use the smaller sizes of coal.

GROWTH IS RETARDED

LOS ANGELES (AP) — H. J. Ryan, county agricultural commissioner, reported cool and foggy weather retarded growth of vegetables and reduced both quality and volume of the first crop of strawberries.

Wolves are killing hundreds of reindeer in the interior of Alaska, John Aho, prospector, reported on a return from the interior.
