REMARKS

Pydraul AC: This company manufactures air compressors that are used to fill air bottles for skin divers. McWhorter is interested in using Pydraul AC as a compressor cylinder lubricant for improved maintenance and safety. Before the compressed air enters the bottles that would be used by a skin diver, it passes through an activated alumina filter grade F-1. Concentrations of 50 parts per million of petroleum cylinder lubricant get by the filter into the air bottle.

Attention: Dick Davis: McWhorter would like to know if a 50 ppm concentration of Pydraul AC in these air bottles would be harmful to a skin diver using them on a regular basis. He assumes his activated alumina filters would be suitable for Pydraul AC but would like your confirmation. I would like your answers as soon as possible because McWhorter is anxious to begin using Pydraul AC in his compressors if he is sure that it would be safe in terms of people using the compressed air to breath. If he adopts the use of Pydraul AC he said he would also want to put it into small containers under his own name and sell it to his air compressor customers.
