ness that will appear in the form of dis-ease, and fears and fobias in adult life.

A great many parents, especially those of foreign birth, believe that a child should be seen and not heard. This, in my humble opinion, is wrong and detrimental to the future development of a child, especially his mental faculties. The constant suppression of his ideas, whether right or wrong, prohibits his defense faculties from developing properly and later in life he becomes an introvert or suffers from certain degrees of introversion and extreme bashfulness. If properly done a child can be taught to respect his parents without gagging or stifling his reasoning power. To do so, however, law and order must be applied, and not just meaningless talk. Infants and children are very clever and soon learn to recognize if spoken words mean law or whether they are just so much idle chatter. In infancy untold harm can also be committed by the parent who is not impartial to his children. Partiality is one of the greatest means through which jealousy is developed. Jealousy in later life can grow to the point where it actually becomes an insanity and the cause of thousands of broken homes, murders, turmoil, grief, and sorrow.

We have now come to the point in our youth's life where he has grown into adolescence or young womanhood or manhood. His ideas and habits are now quite fixed. He is starting to live in a new world, one of knowing it all. He resents being told what to do, how to do it, and when to do it. Only time, adversaries and hard knocks can teach him what his parents already know from experience. Wise parents realize that their children have a destiny to fulfill, a life to live, a soul mate to find, and a home to build. What they sow they must eventually reap. Wise parents will not even try to carry this responsibility as it is too grave. However, we should at all times be ready and willing to let our young men and women drink from the cup of our experience if and when they are thirsty and willing to drink.
