staff so they couldn't get that service.

Q. In 1941 when the foundation became known as the Industrial Hygiene Foundation, in addition to the digests and abstracts, I assume then that there were analytical services available?

A. Yes. There were industrial hygiene monitoring services available. The analytical work was done in the Mellon Institute laboratory.

Q. But through you?

A. Through us.

Q. And then when did the foundation expand to provide the other services that you have talked about, on-site inspections and epidemiology?

A. We started the analytical laboratory in 1973. The epidemiology was first done in the fifties.

Q. In terms of the classifications, i.e., the size of the company involved more dues were paid. Were more digests sent per month depending upon the size of the company as that related to the amount of dues they paid or did all members just get one copy?

A. They got a number of copies commensurate with their dues or with their number of employees.
