American territory will exhibit the clamors of a minority opposing national expansion, as now done by Mr. Bryan and his cohorts and expressing the same arguments and the same bilious forebodings about the destruction of our republic.

NON-CONTIGUOUS EXPANSION.

The territory of Alaska is not contiguous territory to the rest of the United States, but instead of the republic being endangered by this non-contigous expansion, in addition to Alaska's great fisheries, it has among much else also yielded from its extraordinary mineral resources vast amounts of gold to the intelligent and energetic American miners. The importance of its ownership by America may now be perceived in view of the approaching completion of the Trans-Siberian railroad, for, had the Russian statesmen in 1867 possessed the foresight to oppose its sale to us, Alaska would be destined to become a terminal entrepot for the competing commodities of Russia.

THE QUESTION OF TIME.

The argument that the Philippine islands are too distant to be governed by us is another Bryanite fallacy. When we acquired California it was further away in time from the eastern states than the Philippine islands are now from this coast. It took three months by land to journey to California from New York before the construction of the railroad, and yet we can today sail from San Francisco to Manila in three weeks. We can voyage from San Francisco to Honolulu within a week, which is very little longer than it takes to travel by the most rapid train from San Francisco to New York. From Honolulu to Manila it takes little more
