section on grinding brakes. And if you can just read that for us, what it says as it pertains to grinding brake linings for the Model A.

A Starting at "all linings"?

Q Where it says "when riveting".

A Okay. When riveting A or double A brake shoe linings to brake shoes, it is very important that the side of the lining which carries the trademark be placed next to the shoe so to ensure the ground side of the lining being next to the drum.

All linings should be ground after assembling to shoe so as to secure a uniform braking surface.

Q Now, as you read that, do you agree that that states that the brake linings for the Model A was meant to be ground?

A Oh, the Model A linings, no question about that.

Q No question about that?

A That is correct.

Q Also, within the service bulletin there,
