GAS FUMES LEAD TO SUICIDE VICTIM

Man Found In Locked Bathroom, Above Garage, Had Been Dead Since Sept. 4

After climbing a ladder to a window in the second floor of a garage at 4302 Selma place yesterday and forcing his way into a locked bathroom, Coroner Schuyler C. Kelly found the remains of Matt Baumgartner, who, from obtainable evidence, had committed suicide Sept. 4. The gas was still escaping through an open jet and an electric light was turned on in the room.

The body was in such condition that nothing could be determined as to the man's age or circumstances. He left a note saying that he had decided to end his life because of ill health as a result of flu, together with a letter to a brother, Sebastian Baumgartner in Milwaukee, and the telephone address of another brother, John Baumgartner, at Pasadena. The latter was notified and will take charge of the remains after the inquest, the date of which has not been fixed.

Baumgartner rented the living quarters over the garage a month ago with the intention, then of ending his life there, the coroner believes. The letters he left were dated Sept. 4. W. E. Fields, who keeps his car on the lower floor of the garage, noticed an odor yesterday, and the coroner was called when it was found the living quarters had been locked. According to papers he left, Baumgartner was a member of the Odd Fellows at Berkeley. So far as could be ascertained he had no relatives here, and the neighbors know little about him.

PRINCE'S FRIEND ROBBED OF GEMS

the unexpected discovery of Lord Mountbatten in his bed served to end the robbery precipitously.

Great precautions, which are explained by the Cosdens' desire for absolute secrecy, have been made to prevent knowledge of the robbery falling into the hands of public authorities. Port Washington police, who learned of the affair from newspaper men, as did other officials, were indignant at the refusal of the Cosdens to give any information to a detective they sent to the house.

It was made plain tonight that despite the Cosden's wishes for secrecy, the district attorney's office of Nassau county, the county police, the state police and the Port Washington police will investigate the crime.

Discovery of the robbery did not come until 11 o'clock in the morning, while the victims were still sleeping. Mr. Cosden's valet went into one of the second floor rooms to gather up his master's clothes. A $10,000 pearl stud—the gift of Mrs. Cosden to her husband—was missing. The loss of jewelry belonging to Mrs. Norton and Lord Mountbatten was discovered shortly afterwards.

Mrs. Cosden tonight consented to give a statement, according to the [illegible] as outlined above. She [illegible] to answer any questions [illegible] it was said was more than [illegible]
