Fritz Brennecke, coach at Colorado School of Mines, considers the problem as in any other business—that the younger the employes, the easier it is to train them.

Brennecke further admonishes: "Until collegiate athletics puts its own house in order from standpoint of professionalism, it can't very well accuse pro baseball of unethical conduct."

It's a knotty problem, one which college men have wrestled with for some time, and always with the same result—no decision.
