we were, with preventive techniques at hand. During the first three months of this year 85 percent of FHA mortgages for new construction under the regular Section 203 have been in defense industrial areas.

REPAIR LOANS NUMEROUS

"A large number of repair loans are being used to convert existing housing, some of it sub-standard, into livable accommodations which provide a larger number of units. This, serving a two-fold purpose, strikes me as a particularly sound solution to some of the defense emergency needs for additional housing."

James F. Twohy, governor of the Federal Home Loan Bank system: "When you build homes, you are building national barricades against erosion and decay. While we arm, we must look also to those moral defenses which give energy and direction to all armies. If we can provide ourselves with a working economy suitable to our temporal needs and compatible with the personal dignity of man, we will preserve our democracy."

J. C. Nichols, chief of the supply section, production division, OPM (speaking in his individual, not his official capacity): "At least 200,000 defense houses are needed now, perhaps another 200,000 next year. Anything we can do to hold new houses within our city limits should be helpful in preserving the integrity of our cities and towns."

Philip W. Kniskern, Philadelphia, president National Association of Real Estate Boards: "Speedy new construction, planned accurately to fit the need, is the normal, practicable, workable safeguard against the pinch of housing shortage and against abnormal rent conditions in defense industry areas."
