Slight opposition to the issuance of more bonds was made at the time the present bond issue was first discussed on the ground that the city would not be able to market its securities. At that time the city had on hand $400,000 of unsold storm-drain bonds. Those bonds have since been disposed of and purchasers are said to be ready to take the water and hospital bonds as soon as they are issued.

were in the nature of a direct attack upon the defendant's constitutional rights. He argued that getting a defendant to plead to a prior conviction and have the fact recited to the court, robs the man of that presumption of innocence with which the law clothes him right through the trial until the jury returns the verdict.

Judge Smith wanted to know what Mr. McCormas had to say about it, and the Deputy District Attorney answered that there was nothing to it, that the Supreme Court of the State had passed upon the matter long ago. Judge Smith said he always had been of the opinion that the part of the statute referred to was dubious legislation.

The court said more light was needed on the question, that the practice had been followed with these prior con...

Shows Justice Chambers He Fired in Self-defense and to Save His Mother from Prosecution—She Told Him to Be a Man and Defend Her. Bull Pup Chews Goat.

Young Shrewsberry Salmon, who shot the man who persecuted his mother by hanging around the house and yawping out his love, was exonerated from blame yesterday by Justice Chambers, who put in nearly the whole day hearing the testimony.

Joe Sniadecki, the love-lorn man, was much disgruntled and chagrined by this affront. It is not pleasant to ...forward to having your hide ...ed full of lead every time you en... ...rn the incense of love at the ...of the divinity. Sniadecki sneaked out of the courtroom when it was over, swathed in bandages until he looked like an overgrown porcupine with a yellow mustache.

The only excuse he could find to offer for his persecution of Mrs. Salmon was that he thought himself an accepted lover.

Mrs. Salmon said that the man had been persecuting her for years and that she had been obliged to pay him $115 to get rid of him. Even then he wouldn't stay away.

The boy was put on the stand in the afternoon. He is a nice-looking young fellow who works in Mullen and Hluett's store. His story was ingenious and sounded like the truth.

He said Sniadecki had been hanging around the house for a long time, saddling himself on the family and paying nothing for his keep there. Because Mrs. Salmon rejected his attentions he was very surly and at one time threatened to kill the whole outfit. On one occasion he came out with a dagger and chased away one of the boarders, whom he believed to be a rival.

Just before the shooting Joe had been making threats and went out to see Mrs. Salmon. In despair she told her son he ought to brace up and be a man and stop Joe from persecuting her.

Although the boy said he was deathly afraid of Joe, he took the bit in his teeth and resolved to stop it. When he went home for dinner this day, his mother told him Joe had gone away and was coming back with a marriage license and a pistol. The boy went into one of the boarders' rooms and found a gun, which he put in his pocket. When Joe came out he told him firmly he would have to leave his mother alone. Wild with wrath, the man rushed at him and young Salmon shot at him several times, leaving him bleeding on the floor.

CHEWED GOAT.

NAUGHTY BULL PUP.

Mrs. W. L. Hance has a beloved brindle bulldog pup for which she would do murder with a clothes-line prop, as it developed in her trial before Justice Austin yesterday. In fact, she has two of the bulldogs.

She was fined because her two precious little cherub pups discourteously bit a chunk out of another woman's Catalina goat. The whole tragedy was enacted on Bloom street.

Mrs. Hance was proudly promenading Bloom street with the two brindle pride of her household when they
