French Envoy and Kemal Lay Treaty Foundation

Both European and Asiatic Questions Are Involved

Moslems Seeking Advantage Over Great Britain

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 1.—An important treaty between France and Turkey is being negotiated. The basis of the treaty was established last week by M. Franklin Bouillon, the French envoy, and Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the Turkish President. Turkey if France succeeds the most ardent political advocate and Russian pro Germany disappeared from the war. Politically, Turkey is a protectorate for the benefit of Syria and France gives Turkey greater control of the Baghdad railway and establishes an extensive system in the Sanjaks of Alexandretta, Antioch and Aleppo.

But this allowance is of much wider scope, foreshadowing French-Turkish cooperation in Europe as well as Asiatic questions. One sign of the new relationship is that Mustapha Kemal Pasha is going to France in May or June to discuss negotiations between the two countries. Another is that the French government is sending a big military mission to Turkey under General Mizgin and Turkey is sending a similar mission to France.

The French authorities in Syria are now replacing the Armenians in the French gendarmerie with local Turks, who will gradually take over control of the three gendarmerie districts. The immediate objective of M. Franklin-Bouillon was to get a Turkish guarantee to respect Syria because France is now spending 1,000,000,000 francs annually for military purposes. France cannot have its hands free in Europe until it has reached an agreement with Turkey over Syria, and the French dally in establishing an autonomous regime in Northern Syria is preventing the revival of French financial interest in Turkey.

After the Syria question was satisfactorily settled, M. Franklin-Bouillon and Mustapha Kemal Pasha established a basis for an alliance, whereupon the background was developed of Turkey by French capital. The French hope to have in Turkey an instrument not only to influence Russia, but particularly Britain (emphasis added). Britain because the Turks are a possible to send propagandists, secret military agents and arms to all the Moslem countries. The Turks will range the allies with France because they fear the Russians and Germans, and have the English, because the French seem eager to invest a large amount of capital in the country.
