... Hearing Slated To Thresh Out Freeway Route

The State Division of Highways is preparing to hold a public meeting on what could be the most controversial freeway routing in San Diego County, it was ...

Jacob Dekema, district highway engineer, said a meeting would be held some time this summer on the freeway routing of U.S. Highway 101 between Palm and Balboa avenues.

A WASTE APPRAISAL

This 6.8-mile stretch is one of two major routings of Highway 101 not yet approved by the state Highway Commission. The other is from Balboa avenue to the north city limits.

From Balboa avenue to the San Diego River, it is expected that Highway 101 will follow its present route. The city has discussed giving a strip of its west Mission Bay land for as part of the right-of-way for an eight-lane freeway and Pacific Coast road, Dekema said.

COMPLEX INTERCHANGE

A complex interchange with U.S. Highway 80, complicated by the proximity of the river bed, Santa Fe railway and Morena boulevard, poses a serious right-of-way problem, Dekema said.

As does the remainder of the routing of Highway 101 from Point Street.

The present four-lane Highway would be difficult to expand, it is believed. Frontage roads would be hard to build and there are several access streets, notably Rosecrans Street, that would require grade separations or blocking of streets.

ROUTE RESTRICTED

This route is restricted by Convair's Plant 2, the Marine Corps Recruit Depot and the Santa Fe railway.

East of the railway, below Mission Hills, there is more room. Here a freeway could slice through historic Old San Diego.

An earlier city proposal to build a major-street parallel to Highway 101 between Washington and Hawk streets ended in no decision after several hearings.

South of Palm street, right of way is being purchased for the Crosstown Highway 163 freeway, a 6.8-mile stretch to Division street at the city's south boundary.

Dekema said plans are for construction of Highway 101 at eight lanes throughout Southern California.

Dekema would not give the exact date of the hearing. At the meeting on the department's recommended route, bids will be ...
