THE COURT: Very well.

Now, the rights of the plaintiffs in this action are separate and distinct. Their cases are tried together for convenience.

You should decide each plaintiff's case as if it were a separate action. That is the reason that each of you have a separate verdict sheet for each plaintiff.

And as you can see from the explanation as to the meaning of the questions, each question is sequential in nature, so that depending on the answer to the previous questions in question three and question seven and question four and five would depend on whether you go to the next question. And each question is sequentially numbered to ensure that you consider them in the order which they appear in the verdict sheet.

So you are required to begin with question one and two, which have been admitted, and, therefore, you go to question three and depending on question three, you would go to four and five and depending on
