No traces of malignant melanoma or pancreatic cancer have been found in 300 current or former employes of the Monsanto Co., St. Louis. The company checked employes who are or were involved with the production of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB) at the firm's Sauget, Ill., plant. Monsanto released the information about the 300 workers following findings by the Mobil Corp. that two employes had pancreatic cancer and three melanomas. All five had been exposed to a PCB product at one of Mobil's plants.
