Re: Dean Clark, deceased

Dear Mr. Roseman:

I have had the opportunity to study and review the records and autopsy reports on the above. In addition I have requested and received a work record on Mr. Clark. In brief, this record documents the fact that for many years Mr. Clark worked in an atmosphere where he was exposed to asbestos, under conditions where the asbestos dust was continually in the air, on his outer garments and skin and entering the orifices.

After a prolonged illness Mr. Clark passed away on March 4, 1966 at which time a detailed autopsy revealed a bronchogenic carcinoma with numerous metastases as well as emphysema and fibrosis of the lungs. In addition the fibrosis was associated with the presence of asbestos bodies.

Discussion: I have undertaken the opportunity to investigate and evaluate some of the extensive and growing literature on the subject of asbestos and cancer and as many outstanding authorities have stated, see in this situation an analogy to the exposure of the radium watch dial workers and other industrial carcinogens. The supportive literature is growing rapidly and the evidence is almost overwhelming in favor of this association. I can quote a few of the many pertinent references.

Lemy and Adler in Somerset, N. J., the site of an asbestos plant, have accumulated 37 proven cases of asbestosis and lung carcinoma (personal communication). In "Thoracic Diseases" by E. H. Rubin and M. Rubin, W.B. Saunders, Phila., 1962, p. 462 "Exposure to asbestos is known to carry increased hazards for the development of lung cancer." On p. 708-710 "lung cancer has been found as a frequent complication of asbestosis in as high as 20% of the cases" and as compared to exposure to silicosis where only 1.32% of the workers have been found to have lung cancer. K. Doll: "Mortality From Lung Cancer in Asbestos Workers", Brit. J. Indust. Med., 12, 81, 1955, reported that 15 out of 105 asbestos workers died with lung cancer and D.F.A. Merewether in the Proceedings of the Third International Conference of Experts on Pneumoconiosis, Sydney, Australia, 1950, reported 31 of 160 deaths in asbestos workers to be due to lung cancer. In J.R. Pignall's "Carcinoma of the Lung", Livingstone, Ltd., Edinburgh, 1958, p. 50, "It is evident therefore that lung cancer is a specific industrial hazard of asbestos workers" and in the two volume "Chest Diseases" by M.M. Perry and Sir Thomas H. Sellors, Butterworths, London, 1963, Vol. 1, p. 547, it is pointed out that in Germany carcinoma of the lung in asbestos workers is now recognized as an industrial disease.

Perhaps one of the most authoritative sources of reference now available is in the Annals of the New York Academy of Sciences, 1965, Vol. 132, p. 1-766, which is a Conference On The Biological Effects of Asbestos and which devotes the section from p. 507 to 685 on the relationship between asbestos and cancer. In brief, in an article by Buchanan, p. 517, it is pointed out that there is in England a high and increasing relation of lung cancer in asbestos workers both male and female and "The conclusion of a study is that even when viewed against the steadily rising incidence of lung cancer in the population as whole, there seems little doubt that there is a special risk of an intrathoracic tumor if asbestos is also present in the lung." In the United States Hammond, Selikoff and Churg, p. 523, report that in a study of deaths of New York City asbestos insulation workers 20% died of carcinomas of the lung (or pleura). Similar reports from other parts of the world are given including that of Dresden asbestos workers, p. 573, and other areas. Finally, the Working Group on Asbestos and Cancer plotting a protocol for further study, p. 710, states "there is evidence of association between exposure to asbestos and malignant neoplasia." "The types of tumors which have been shown to be associated with exposure to asbestos dust are: 1. Carcinoma of the lung; 2. Diffuse mesothelioma of the pleura and peritoneum."

Another outstanding world authority on occupational cancers, W.C. Hueper, who has objectively detailed much of the relevant information in a new monograph "Occupational and Environmental Cancers of the Respiratory System", Springer-Verlag, New York, 1966, p. 47, concludes that "Although cancer of the lung does not seem to be the most frequent fatal complication of asbestosis, it is evidently sufficiently frequent for elevating the lung cancer rate as a group and there is a serious sequela of exposure to asbestos."

In a discussion of the clinopathologic relations Hueper indicates that it is characteristic that the lung cancer has associated fibrosis and the presence of asbestos bodies. In all of these items there is a distinct correlation in the autopsy findings on Mr. Clark.

Thus, it is my considered professional belief that the long and continued exposure to asbestos by Mr. Clark was a direct and probable cause of his development of cancer of the lung which brought about his demise.

Trusting that this report is of assistance to you,

Very truly yours,

John B. Field, M.D., Ph.D.
