Rich Glick was sworn in as a FERC commissioner this morning, according to the agency's official Twitter account.

Glick had been the general counsel for Democrats on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. Before joining the panel last year, he was vice president of government affairs for Iberdrola Renewables Inc. for about a decade. The company changed its name to Avangrid Renewables last year. He also worked as an adviser to Energy Secretary Bill Richardson during the Clinton administration.

It remains unclear when Kevin McIntyre, President Donald Trump's pick for FERC chairman, will be sworn in.

Glick and McIntyre were confirmed by the Senate in early November and are joining FERC in the midst of the agency's review of a controversial grid resiliency proposal from the Energy Department that would prop up economically struggling coal and nuclear power plants.

WHAT'S NEXT: FERC is expected to take some "final action" on the Energy Department's controversial grid proposal by Dec. 11.
