Today on Climate Beat . . .

. . . we visited Virginia, which is moving ahead with a draft GHG trading rule that is earning the praise of the nine-states in the Regional Greenhouse Gas Initiative (RGGI) power sector cap-and-trade program, which say the Old Dominion's plan shares many common elements with the Northeast trading market.

Speaking of rules, producers of advanced and cellulosic biofuels are mounting a last-ditch push to persuade the Trump administration to mandate higher volumes of low-carbon cellulosic biofuels required under the renewable fuel standard than proposed.

And our daily news roundup looked at how the Trump administration's release of a major climate science report does not appear to have shifted its climate regulatory policies or the views of key political nominees.
