DANCING WITH NOZZLEHEADS

In the old days -- twenty-some years ago -- the U.S. Forest Service hired scientists to manage the national forests. Silviculturists, they were called, trained in modern forestry methods by professional expert witnesses for Dow Chemical Company, /027040115055066Monsanto/02704011504806 Forestry Association.

The loggers called them nozzleheads, so did the fishermen and farmers, the hunters, the hill people in the Coast Range.
