

The COPPERHEAD

From the tip of his busy tail to the point of his copper-headed head, he's as beautiful as the leaves of early autumn. His strike is hard and of the lightning's speed. His aim is deadly. And yet, we like to think that there is a deal of sportsmanship wrapped up in his scaly hide. For he seldom strikes without first sending forth the whirring, humming, saw-criy produced when he vibrates his active tail.
