

To: Jackson, Ryan[jackson.ryan@epa.gov]
From: American Enterprise Institute
Sent: Tue 10/17/2017 10:03:56 AM
Subject: AEI Today: In one key respect, Macron complements President Trump

Strong stances in favor of an integrated Europe are often met with skepticism in Washington, especially among Republicans.

AEI's daily publication of independent research, insightful analysis, and scholarly debate

Reuters

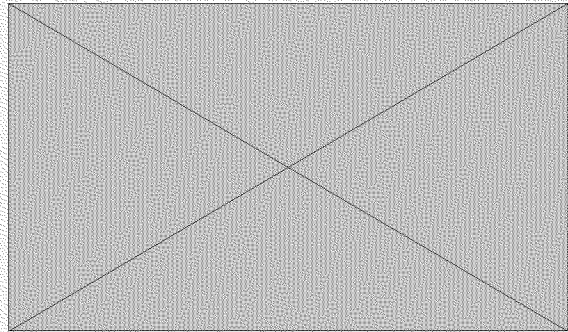

In one key respect, Macron complements President Trump

Paul Zajac and Boris Toucas | The Hill

Strong stances in favor of an integrated Europe are often met with skepticism in Washington, particularly among Republicans. But since President Trump took office, he's complained about the so-called weakness of institutions and political leaders across the pond. Although they articulate opposite worldviews, the US president has high praise for Macron's personality and resolve. The two men respect each other. Where does that lead us?

Full Screen

Warner Brothers

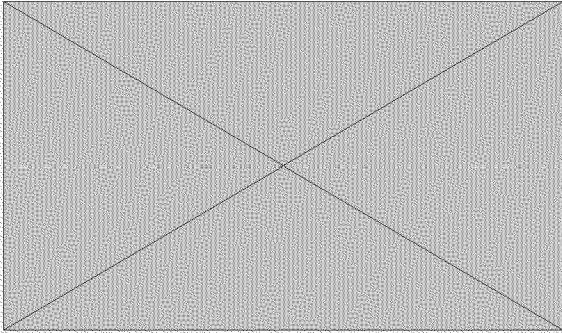

60-second take: The 'Blade Runner' curse of capitalism

Jonah Goldberg | AEI video

Ridley Scott crafted his 1982 film "Blade Runner" with an atmosphere of paranoia about corporate power. The logos of some of the most ubiquitous brands of the 1980s dominate the neon skyline of 2019 Los Angeles. But while it's implied that the companies in the film would endure, AEI's Jonah Goldberg explains that the nature of capitalism is for corporate behemoths to compete for survival as newer, better, more innovative businesses emerge.

Full Screen

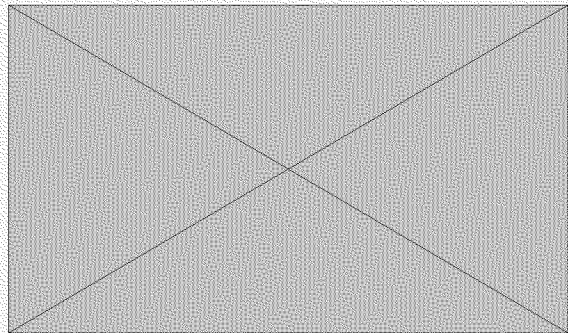

Reuters

A slow death for the Iran deal

John R. Bolton | The Wall Street Journal

As Abba Eban observed, "Men and nations behave wisely when they have exhausted all other resources." So it goes with America and the Iran deal. While Congress considers how to respond — or, more likely, not respond — we should focus on the grave threats inherent in the deal. Peripheral issues have often dominated the debate, but the core provisions are the central danger. There are no real "fixes" to this intrinsically misconceived agreement.

Sierra Club

Reuters

The new 'New Europe' is within sight

Dalibor Rohac | The American Interest

When the four Visegrad countries joined the European Union, hopes ran high for a reinvigoration. Today, reforms in Central Europe have not only stalled, but some of the main achievements of the post-1989 era, including independent media, judiciaries, and openness to foreign investment, are now under attack. Yet the tide might be turning again. Across Central Europe, new reformist parties are hoping to emulate Emmanuel Macron's success in France.

Full story

MORE FROM AEI

If data is the new oil, is Bezos the new Rockefeller?

James Pethokoukis | AEIdeas

Myopic focus on the Iran deal misses the point: America needs to contain, not negotiate

Marie Donovan | The Hill

Harvard demonstrates what's wrong with universities in one single-minded panel

Michael Rubin | Washington Examiner

As a major drug company transfers its patents to a Native American tribe, Congress moves in

Michael Rosen | AEIdeas

As chaos develops, what went wrong in Kirkuk, Iraq?

Michael Rubin | Washington Examiner

Why do American parents push their kids so hard at sports but not academics?

Mark J. Perry | AEIdeas

One-pager: The funding our military needs to deter and defeat adversaries across the globe

Mackenzie Eaglen | AEI

In India, 'Modinomics' is in trouble

Sadanand Dhume | The Wall Street Journal [paywall]

Watch live this morning: Alan Jacobs offers a survival guide for a world at odds

Ryan Streeter | AEI event today at 10:00 AM ET

Learning the lessons of Kurdistan, where racism is becoming a dangerous political tool

Michael Rubin | AEIdeas

AEI cares about your inbox. Want to tailor your AEI subscriptions? Click here and get content that matters to you.

View online | Ensure delivery | Subscribe

American Enterprise Institute

1789 Massachusetts Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20036

202.862.5800 | www.aei.org

This message is for: jackson.ryan@epa.gov | Manage preferences | Unsubscribe