Returns from the sales tax, California's No. 1 income source, showed a loss of $2,962,781 as compared with the third quarter of 1941. Riley attributed the decline to $31,009,754 in revenue to war restrictions on the purchase of automobiles, tires, refrigerators, washing machines and other durable goods.

Michael Todd brought burlesque back by daring to stage "Star and Garter" with Gypsy Rose Lee and Bobby Clark as principals. It not only is good burlesque but good musical comedy and worth musical comedy prices.

However, along came "Wine, Women and Song," presenting Margie Hart and Jimmy Savo. It hoped to do the same thing and fell far short. As burlesque it would have been a bargain at 55 cents, but as musical comedy it was an imposition at $1.65.

Burlesque, under any name, has only itself to blame for its present unhappy state. The usual rule of competition being the life of trade did not work here, because competition was the undoing of this odd form of theatrical art. Business, peculiarly, is much better in cities which have only one burlesque house. Where there were two, the effort to outdo the other usually meant death of both. The strippers went so far and the comics got so putrid that nobody could take it, and the official city bans were just a reflection of the customers' growing indifference.

The comics, I think, are a great deal more to blame than the strippers, who by and large operate within prescribed limits in any given city. But the comics all seem to be under the delusion that perversion is screamingly funny, and a burlesque show without half a
