Let Off Steam In Workshop

By STEVE ELLINGSOHN

There's something to be said for old days when a man took a few miles, in a way, to a spare-time workshop. Machinery was important, a source of power.

After a man spent a day at work with a team of ornery mules, he came home with the cussedness pretty worked out of his system. What he was looking for more than anything was peace and quiet. These men divorced in those days.

Nowadays people bottle up a lot of nervous tension, and without men who never seemed to consent to a fussing, they have to find some way to blow off. A wife and kids are not the solution.

Yes, just living in this fast and machine era is a frustrating thing. We need to find ways to ease our emotional tensions and face a better world.

A home workshop is one place where men surely be satisfied. They can turn their hands as well as their minds. Some active men are glad to do it, and you will see.

A good practical place to start to build is the coffee table. You can build one with NBB's new, big, dress, pretty, durable, Abbey of "Challenge" show series. Here is a piece of furniture that improves with the more marks and scratches it has. The better it looks.

Use it in front of the fireplace, you can sit on it and close to it. It will also serve as a rugged and handsome coffee table. You may make long as you desire and the pattern laid out in such a way that it may be made higher if you wish.

To build this coffee bench all you need do is trace the full size pattern wood, then saw out the parts and nailly put them together. The pattern lists the required materials and gives easy-to-understand directions. Simple hand tools are all you need.

Quick clean-up: Simply wash out your roller or brush in detergent and water. No smelly cleaners needed.
