have desert and sometimes we wouldn't.

But we would always go on Sunday drives, so Sundays was a time to expand my horizons geographically.

Q Do you recall any particular places that you would go?

A Go out to, I guess, Liberty Dam which was a long way because they hadn't built Columbia, and they were building Columbia.

And we would drive up to the Softee place called Prices, I guess, on Northern Parkway and Liberty Heights to get ice cream. Some of the places became more integrated.

We would go and travel. We traveled south to see some of the factories, show me the can factory or something around Canton, and we would also go visit some of the -- well, my parents -- we were visiting some school because they were trying to decide where to go to and we visited friends in Annapolis, and we would get dessert and talk about things and that would be sort of my time to read in the back and they could
