gency for the children for recreational equipment that is beyond the family budget.

In checking a neighborhood, talk to some of the established families. They will tell you if the area is quiet, well-kept and if the residents are congenial people. Usually, if the area is one of homeowners, it is a well-kept neighborhood because homeowners have a high degree of pride in their property.

Once you have decided on a neighborhood, consider the lot on which the house is situated. Does it have good top soil? Good drainage? Is the yard or patio sufficient for your needs? Be sure you know the boundaries of your lot. Your builder or realtor can advise you on all these factors.

As for the house itself, many families seem to know immediately if a home is right for them. But turn your attention to the size and arrangement of the rooms. Do they provide for the type of living you want? Check the methods of heating and lighting.

Ask yourself if the house fits your needs for cooking, eating, bathing, sleeping, cleaning, recreation, garaging and storing. A house without enough storage space is no bargain at any cost.

When you have checked these factors, you are ready to enjoy the security, savings, and satisfaction as well as the better living that comes when you own a new home.

Remodeling Jobs Call For Skills

Not all of the $13 to $15 a lion that Americans will spend that spend this year to model their homes will suit in improvements.

Unfamiliarity with building restrictions, the use of inflexible materials and other common remodeling errors will add to a national "degraded" bill running into the hundreds, possibly even millions.

One way to assure success of your own home improvement project is to professional help before start.

A contractor or architect can quickly tell you plan is workable. Ehl can give you sound guidance on building restrictions.

For many remodels a contractor is your man. You are planning a project, it will pay to suit an architect. His fee will more than set by the money he you.

Use of quality materials may cost slightly more than other products, but in long-range economy
