forced. "Chief Taylor will take care of him for fingerprinting and other necessary details. Two witnesses positively identified him. He would not talk or make statements, simply saying he was in a turmoil inside."

Fitts said he was unable to persuade Clark to talk about a .38 caliber revolver police claim he purchased last Tuesday. He also refused to discuss his whereabouts after he returned to Los Angeles Friday from Agua Caliente where he spent the week end.

The district attorney declared questioning of Clark failed to reveal a motive for the double shooting which threw Los Angeles political circles into chaos and resulted in rumors that "the lid will be knocked off racketeering in Los Angeles."

Clark's surrender was dramatic. He drove alone to a parking station across from the hall of justice, where he had prosecuted big cases, and walked slowly across the street. He wore a dark suit and white straw hat. He appeared tired and his eyes were deeply circled.

Scores of newspapermen and former associates of Clark met him. Shrabook hands with many of them as he went into Fitts' inner office, nervously fumbling with a cigaret. S. W. "Pinky" Thompson, an attorney and friend, took a message Clark wrote to his wife, Nancy, daughter of the late Circuit Judge James T. Malone of Long Island.

"Dearie, believe in me," Clark wrote.

A brother, Al Clark, appeared shortly after the surrender and was asked by Clark to bring him a clean shirt and other clothing.

Davis, where he had driven to meet the train on which his daughter Eleanor McClatchy was returning to Sacramento. He stepped onto the home manhole cover, fracturing his shoulder in several places.
