How to Buy a Paint Job that will save you money

There are many claims made about paint to the layman. These are very likely to be confusing rather than helpful for the simple reason that they are claims and not actual, common-sense facts that have been proved by test and experience.

Real facts are necessary if you, as a homeowner, are to know enough about the paint that is used on your house to make sure you are getting your money's worth. In this section we point out these facts with definite reasons why paint does certain things.

Certain paint troubles are always caused by the wrong kind of paint. There are quite easy to identify and if you have any of them on your house at present, you should be interested to learn how they can be avoided next time.

We suggest that you look over your house with a critical eye. It is easy to get into the habit of not really seeing the things we look at every day. Sometimes, changes in the paint condition of a house take place so gradually that you don't realize how much it needs paint.

Cracking and scaling are really one defect. Cracking is when the paint film breaks clear down to the surface of the wood. This allows moisture to enter behind the paint film which naturally loosens the paint so that scaling results. This trouble is caused by the use of a "hard" paint, one which becomes brittle as it ages. Such a film cannot follow the movement of wood as it expands and contracts as it breaks on exposure.

This is a particularly costly paint failure. In addition to the unsightliness of a cracked and scaling paint, it also costs more to repaint a surface in this condition. The surface must be cleaned down to the bare wood; otherwise the old paint would continue to scale off after repainting and take the new paint with it.

WHO'S TO DO THE JOB?

If there were no store to painting than covering the surface you could get anybody to do it. There, the less you paid for the task—the better off you would be. But painting isn't simply covering the surface with a substance called paint. Painting is an acquired art. It's acquired through training under competent supervision, through study of good painters and through experience of knowing what to do and how to do it.

Painting will never be a standardized affair. There are too many variable factors that affect the finished result and that influence the life of the paint job. Humidity, kind of surface, condition of surface, time of year, amount of sunlight are just a few of the elements about which you must be aware before a man is qualified to call himself a painter.

If you do not know the painter selecting your painting, either through a job he has done for you before or through work he has done for your friends or neighbors, take the trouble to check his references. Talk with the people he has worked for. Make sure that he is reputable—that he is competent and reliable.

There is more to the estimate, there are some things that should be mutually understood between you and your painter.
