WOOD STAINS AND FINISHES

The rich, natural beauty of exotic imported woods, and the warmth and charm of our more common domestic varieties, can easily be imitated with Dutch Boy Wood Stains. Use Wood Stain on any unfinished interior woodwork — or on wood from which the previous finish has been removed. Use on hard or soft woods — on paneling, cabinets, furniture, floors or trim. One coat is usually sufficient. Wipe it on ...

or brush it on ... either way, you'll be more than pleased with the outstanding results. In addition to enhancing the natural beauty of the grain pattern, Wood Stain protects paneled walls against normal wear. Wood Stain is self-sealing, too. After staining furniture, floors or trim, the use of a special sealer is unnecessary before finishing with the appropriate Dutch Boy gloss or semi-gloss varnish.

Easy-to-blend combinations of ready-mixed Wood Stains may be used to simulate the appearance of almost any wood surface. Shown below are just a few of the wood-tone effects that are easily achieved by combining equal parts of the ready-mixed stains, as indicated. By using other combinations — and by varying the proportions — an almost unlimited number of special effects can be created.

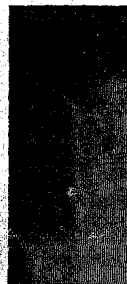

Stained samples match as accurately as possible results obtained by staining stains on birch, wiping off excess and, when dry, applying one coat of Dutch Boy Urethane Satin Finish. Color depth and tone may vary with type of wood and application. Before use, always test any stain on sample of wood to be certain it produces desired effect.

Wood Stain only ... with Gloss Finish

A clear, protective finish is recommended over most stained surfaces for added durability — especially if surface will be subject to wear, or to frequent cleaning. One half of the stained sample at right has been finished with a Dutch Boy gloss varnish to illustrate the change in appearance — the added depth and brilliance. To duplicate the low-lustre, "hand-rubbed" finish on the other Wood Stain samples, use a Dutch Boy satin finish varnish.
