PCB's discovered in Hoosier streams

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — Hoosiers who plan to go fishing in two streams in the Bloomington-Bedford area have received a warning from the Indiana State Board of Health — don't eat too many of the fish.

The health board said Tuesday Salt Creek and Clear Creek between Bloomington and Bedford were found to contain high levels of polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs. While the chemicals are also found in the Bedford's water supply, the board said at present levels a person would have to drink the water for 700 years to accumulate a dangerous level.
