The program has a message, Zeltser added, as from his entertainment

"Instead of having someone deliver 20 minutes of rhetoric," he explained, "why can't we turn people on to thinking about where they've been. We want to stir up some questions."

Zelizer is concerned the program might become controversial since it is a radical departure from tradition.

"It may or may not work, but we have the right to fail," he said. "At least we're innovating and trying to present a program that will catch the fancy of students and faculty and those who come to see it."

After all, he pointed out, graduation ceremonies should be "for the benefit
