suitor has appeared. He has sufficient means to support my mother apart from me, and is willing to do so. But she does not care to live alone and urges me to give up this man also. Should I? Does a child perpetually eternally owe obedience to a Mother?

SCHOOL TEACHER.
Hardly. Take your man. You have lived long enough with someone who seems not to appreciate your devotion. You would be very foolish to lose this chance to have your own home. Remember when your own children grow to womanhood and do not be the same. We often forget our youth and what we suffered.

I cannot forget a bedraggled little butterfly of a girl who wore her skirts too short and no stockings. I hope that every girl reader of mine will be sure that her frocks at least cover her knees. Men, while they will romp with you, never change at heart. They do not really love their loved women to do things that cause comment and go too much against Madame Grundy. Just break a few basic rules and expect help from the man who shared the breaking. He will vanish into mist and you will be left alone to face the music.

As to skirts, we will never go back to the insensate long things that touch the ground, but there is a happy medium of length.
