You are cordially invited to attend the 34th Annual Meeting of Industrial Hygiene Foundation, industry's nonprofit, research association for the advancement of health and human relations in its workforce.

Emphasizing the importance of science and technology in solving health problems in industry, the 34th Annual Meeting program highlights prominent speakers from government, industry and universities who will provide specific examples of sound and progressive management of such problems. Increasing governmental concern over occupational safety and health has led to first steps in regulating industrial hygiene standards. Attention will be focused not only on the actions of government but also on the practical aspects of implementation of such regulations throughout industry.

IHF, through its membership of approximately 400 companies and associations, is devoted to the protection and improvement of the health of the nation's workforce through application of the coordinated scientific measures, technological and engineering controls which characterize sound industrial hygiene management, which involves the contributions of numerous individuals from the many and varied disciplines of environmental and occupational health.

Based on the combined efforts of thousands of occupational physicians, nurses and industrial hygienists, the workers in modern industry in the United States benefits from the same types of life support technology as are applied in protecting the life and health of our astronauts. In recognition of their efforts, we offer each of them our thanks.

Cordially,

G. A. Webb
